

'66 Coupe on eBay

Posted by OldInjun - 2010/09/06 21:09

Here's a beauty for sale by "Bonneville Joe" Evans. All done, ready to go/show.

Click here for link

Joe Evans previously sold the Blue Charcoal '65 to Registry member "Pontiacclady".
wonder where he's getting all the 2+2's?

=====

Re:'66 Coupe on eBay

Posted by BigBrother - 2010/09/07 22:57

I thought the '65 he sold earlier in the year was one of the best deals so far this year on a 2+2(congrats to the member you mentioned who bought it)I was looking really hard at that one. I really like what he did on this. The auto will always keep the value down on these... I'd be shocked if the bid goes over $20k...the buyer will be getting a really nice car.

=====

Re:'66 Coupe on eBay

Posted by OldInjun - 2010/09/08 08:54

Automatic or not, I'd be shocked if this goes for anything near as low as $20K. There's a lot of car there.

=====

Re:'66 Coupe on eBay

Posted by BigBrother - 2010/09/08 10:06

I don't think it will sell for $20k but that is where the ebay bidding will end. The last time he listed the '65 (I think 3 times) starting at about the same place and eventually brought his buy it now price down to I think $23k and it didn't close on ebay.

For any 2+2 fan it is a great value...

=====

Re:'66 Coupe on eBay

Posted by OldInjun - 2010/09/08 15:41

I struggle constantly trying to figure why these cars don't get the respect (i.e. market value) they deserve.

Slap a bowtie on that car and it would sell easily in the $30's ($40's at Barrett-Jackson).
Very frustrating.

=====

Re:'66 Coupe on eBay

Posted by BigBrother - 2010/09/09 00:25

Here's a good example of one that went through the Barrett Jackson auction at Palm Beach this year(#99)

<http://www.barrett-jackson.com/application/onlineSubmission/currentcarlist.aspx?aid=323&sd=04%2f01%2f2010&ed=04%2f03%2f2010>

I think it is at very comparable quality to the ebay car (upgraded to HO etc) but this one had a 4 speed (which I think adds $5k to this car) sold for $28,000 plus buyers premium brought the buyers cost to $31,900 but the seller got about $25,000.

$22,000 brought a '65 WH code at the RM auction in San Diego and over $40k for a really nice HO (looked like it was ending at $35k but 2 buyers hooked up and pushed the price. The RM auction spent hundreds of thousands of dollars to promote the auction and the results I think show the top of the market.

Bid is already at $20k. I think around $23k is the market price for this one...

=====

Re:'66 Coupe on eBay

Posted by OldInjun - 2010/09/09 09:44

Your analysis would seem to be correct. I am just surprised that's all they bring. Had I been there, I would have bid up the Mayfair Maize car - very nice car.

=====

Re:'66 Coupe on eBay

Posted by BigBrother - 2010/09/13 11:45

Sold at "buy it now price" $27,900 fair deal for both seller and buyer. From looking at bidding action it looked like someone was really interested and put a nice bid in at $24,000 and when he got out bid he realized he better do the "buy it now" if he really wanted the car or risk losing it for just a couple of thousand bucks. When I saw the bidding action this morning I thought if someone doesn't do the the "buy it now" I was going to be a little suspicious of the bidding...but good sale. Congrats

=====

Re:'66 Coupe on eBay

Posted by OldInjun - 2010/09/13 14:14

Nice to see a 2+2 getting some respect.

=====

Re:'66 Coupe on eBay

Posted by OldInjun - 2010/10/04 22:39

We have a new member. "8lug" just joined our group - the buyer of the '66 coupe discussed in this post. He's awaiting delivery of the car. Hopefully he'll share the "first drive" experience & some pictures with us here.

Welcome aboard !

=====